

Industry experts specialising in the fire risk management of NHS buildings are set to gather once again at this year's National Association of Healthcare Fire Officers (NAHFO) conference in Daventry.

NAHFO is an organisation that acts as a national voice for all those associated with healthcare fire safety. Working closely with other organisations to promote the highest standards of fire safety within healthcare environments.

The three day conference, themed around Fire Risk Management and who should be responsible, will feature a range of continued professional development (CPD) courses for consultants dedicated to improving their understanding of fire regulations, standards and requirements.

The Fire Hazard and Protection Roadshow will be making a stop at the conference to showcase all the latest fire detection and suppression solutions. The latest PROFILE Flexible detection panels will be demonstrated by our experts who will provide in depth discussion on how fire safety systems should be designed in order to achieve maximum efficiency and safety.

Martin Guest Key account manager for fire ZETTLER detection products said: "Considering the vulnerability of patients and people who use our hospitals, whether that's in patients or our patients, we know that there are a lot of challenging factors the fire safety system must address. At this year's conference, we will be providing visitors with our expert advice and giving them an overview of the latest developments in our technology and how this has been developed to help provide suitable solutions for these challenging environments."
